

The northern bobwhite quail gets its name from its distinctive call, which sounds like "bob-white!" This cheerful two-syllable whistle is a way for the male quails to communicate with their mates and signal their territory.